Description	Scheduled Monument 1009338 The monument is the moated site of Maghull Manor. It includes a slightly raised rectangular island measuring c.80m by 60m that is flanked on its eastern and northern sides and around the north-west corner by a waterlogged moat 1.4m deep to the water level and up to 21m

wide on the northern side and 8m wide on the eastern side. Elsewhere the moat has been infilled. A waterlogged outlet channel issues from the moat's north-west corner. Access to the island is by a causeway on the eastern side. The building that occupied the island is thought to have been demolished during the late 18th century when the present Manor House was built to the south-west of the moated site. Brick and sandstone foundations, a stone-lined well, fragments of burnt daub, floor tile and medieval pottery were found on the island after shallow ploughing in the late 1970's. All fences, walls, paths, and a brick and sandstone folly at the island's north-east corner are excluded from the scheduling, although the ground beneath these features is included.

Description	1030/0/10013 DAMFIELD LANE 30-AUG-05 The Parish Church of St Andrew II Anglican church, 1878-80, extended 1998 designed by F Doyle. Built of rock-faced dressed coursed stone with ashlar quoins and dressings and graduated slate roof, in gothic style with angle buttresses and plinth. Chancel, north and south transepts, tower, nave and aisles, porch to north and attached vestry and 1998 hall to south side. EXTERIOR: One bay chancel with tripartite drop-arch east window with hood mould and single drop-arch window to either side. North transept has tripartite drop-arch window in gable end. South transept has 2-light four-centred arch window on east side and rose window in gable end above link arched doorway to vestry which is a hipped roofed square building with 3-light traceried window in square surround. North aisle has drop-arched door adjacent to transept, and windows alternating 2 and 3-light with intervening buttresses. South aisle abuts 1998 hall. Nave has paired clerestory windows, those nearest the chancel with plate tracery. Porch at west end of north transept with gabled end and drop-arched doorway and wooden door. Tower at west end with battlemented parapet, 4-sided clock with louvred window below, and stair turret in north-east corner. Large west window is drop-arched with 3 lights with a double plinth below, and two slit windows in tower above. INTERIOR: Chancel has stained glass in tripartite east window. White marble reredos with cusped niches, finials and carved figures behind altar. Decoratively carved wooden choir stalls and wooden reading desk in the shape of an eagle. Octagonal pulpit in white marble with relief carving in panels and coloured marble shafts. Nave arcade has plain columns with capitals carved with foliage, supporting wide drop-arched openings to aisles. Original wooden bench pews in nave and aisles. Windows of aisles and north transept have good quality stained glass, that in west wall of south aisle having been transferred from south wall when a new doorway was constructed into the hall built in 1998. South transept is divided from the rest of the church by carved wood and glass screens, including a door with geometric patterned stained glass, leading to the vestry. Vestry has pyramidal roof structure with exposed converging trusses, and simple plate tracery to windows. Nave roof has scissor-beam trusses supported on corbels above the columns of the nave arcade, and aisles have lean-to ceilings. West end of nave has a large arched opening to the tower, with a tripartite window above. Tower area has been partitioned off with a glass screen to provide a children's area. West window has stained glass with brass plaque below commemorating the dead of World War One. Door to tower stair, chamber above with exposed snecked stone and brick arched lintels to slit windows, containing exposed workings of the clock. HISTORY: The church was opened in 1880, built to replace a much smaller church which still sits in the grounds. This church, now known as the Unsworth Chapel, is listed II* and dates to around 1400. The community hall on the south side of the church was built in 1998.

SUMMARY OF IMPORTANCE This 1880 church, by the architect J F Doyle, is a good example of late nineteenth century gothic style, with some excellent stained glass and other finely executed fittings, combining to produce an harmonious composition. It thereby achieves a successful blend with both its semi-rural environment and with other nearby listed structures to form a well-balanced group.

ormer epileptic home, now a nursing home, 1902, built for the Maghull Homes. Red brick with roughcast upper floors, deep pitched roof with replaced concrete roof tiles, brick chimneystacks. 2 1/2 storeys. Design influenced by Richard Norman Shaw's "Old English" styling.

Reasons for Designation

Harrison Home, constructed in 1902 as part of the Maghull Homes, is listed at Grade II for the following principal reasons:

* Architectural interest: it possesses a skilfully articulated and distinguished Norman Shaw-influenced design that is more like a country villa than a welfare institution; reflecting the first-class patients it originally catered for;

* Interior survival: the building's original internal arrangements and spatial planning, including the separation of the residents' spaces from the service rooms, remain clearly readable, and numerous original features survive, including doors, tiled and floorboard floors, the main stair and service stair, and fireplaces in the two principal ground-floor rooms;

* Planning: the provision of individual private bedrooms and separate bathrooms directly reflects the requirements of the home's first-class patients; providing a degree of privacy and comfort that they would have been used to;

* Historic interest: the Maghull Homes were established to enable epileptics to receive schooling and skills training, as well as accommodation and medical care that would facilitate a better quality of life, and they represent the first provision of residential care for epileptics in England. As one of the best surviving buildings from this specialist institution, Harrison Home is an important physical reminder of this pioneering early provision.

History

In C19 England a lack of knowledge about epilepsy and a lack of treatment meant that epileptics were often treated as outcasts and were excluded from schools and workplaces; the latter often being dangerous for epileptics due to the industrial nature of much of the work during this period. As a result, many epileptics were poorly educated and often destitute, as well as stigmatised by society. Due to the high numbers of destitute people living in Liverpool in the C19, the city was the first place in England to make special provision for people with chronic epilepsy.

Henry Cox, a wealthy Liverpool merchant, and Dr William Alexander were both involved with the Liverpool Central Relief Society in the late-C19. Dr Alexander was well-known for his surgical expertise, and as the Resident Medical Officer at Brownlow Hill Workhouse, Liverpool, he had many epileptic patients. He consequently became interested in surgery for the condition and wrote numerous articles for medical journals, as well as an influential book entitled 'The Treatment of Epilepsy' in 1889. In 1888 Henry Cox offered to fund a hospital for epileptics in Liverpool, but Dr Alexander believed a country location to be more suitable, and later that year Maghull Homes was established at the Manor House, Maghull, leasing an existing late-C18 country house.

Maghull Homes was the first of its kind in England and the founders visited Bethel Epileptic Colony, near Bielefeld, Germany for inspiration. The Bethel Colony had been established in 1867, and by the late-1880s it had grown to a community of approximately 3000 people. However, although the visitors were impressed by the social and occupational opportunities provided by the colony, Dr Alexander was concerned about the medical treatment of many of the patients, with many exhibiting signs of over-dosage. In addition, the colony was foremost a religious institution and medical care was secondary, with patients encouraged to 'look to the next world' rather than this one for a permanent cure.

Maghull Homes catered for three classes of patient and was run by a committee mainly comprised of Liverpool business and professional men who were associated with charitable effort in the city. Patients were self-funded, either through paying themselves, by their friends or family, or by the guardians of their home union. The much lower third-class fee only covered basic provisions so these patients, who provided the majority of residents, were expected to carry out menial tasks at the home.

In the years following 1888 and into the C20, neighbouring land was purchased and Maghull Homes was expanded with new purpose-built homes being constructed, including in 1902, the Harrison Home. By 1975 the Maghull Homes had 11 homes, as well as other buildings, including a farm, occupation centres and clubhouse; providing accommodation, schooling and employment on the estate. Harrison Home was named after Frederic Harrison, the President of the Homes in 1902 who operated a shipping line out of Liverpool. The home was constructed by Brown and Backhouse at a cost of £5421 and opened in June 1902. It was built for 11 first-class patients, as well as a matron, nurses, servants and a few third-class patients as attendants, and 'enabled wealthy epileptics to live in the comfort to which they were accustomed'; first-class space at the home was advertised in newspapers around the world, including The Times of India.

In the latter half of the C20, following changing thinking in the treatment of epilepsy and a decrease in the need for epileptic homes, Maghull Homes (now known as the Parkhaven Trust) diversified into other areas. As a result, since 1987 Harrison Home has been in use as a care home for the elderly, and most of the other homes have been demolished.
